14.	Brief Description of the Assignment	Bangladesh's safety, security, and stability are still at risk from terrorism and its funding, which present intricate and dynamic challenges. There is still a large gap in the comprehensive evaluation of the financial aspects of terrorism, especially the means by which money is raised, transferred, and used as well as the global networks involved, despite the implementation of numerous counterterrorism measures. This study intends to close that gap by offering a thorough examination of the dangers of financing terrorism, with an emphasis on locating systemic weaknesses and wider connections within the nation's financial system. This study is vital because there is an increasing need to comprehend and deal with the dangers posed by terrorist financing networks in Bangladesh, as well as their origins, channels, and disruptive tactics. By means of an extensive National Risk Assessment (NRA), this study seeks to give policymakers, law enforcement, and other pertinent stakeholders vital information about the weaknesses of the domestic financial system and the global connections that could enable the funding of terrorism. The study's conclusions will aid in the creation of evidence-based policies and calculated interventions, which will ultimately improve national security and fortify the nation's ability to fight terrorism successfully.
